

INNOVATIVE HISTORY EXHIBITS

The Cornelius Low House

Middlesex County Museum
1225 River Road
Piscataway, NJ 08854

The Cornelius Low house stands as one of the finest examples of Georgian architecture in the state, and one of only two homes that remain from the once-thriving port community of Raritan Landing. Cornelius Low was a wealthy merchant of Dutch ancestry, who built his family home in 1741. The home now serves as the County Museum.

The museum hosts innovative and award-winning exhibits on New Jersey History. The current exhibit on display through 2018 is: Over There, Over Here: New Jersey During World War I. Explore the story, from the battlefield to the homefront, in this milestone exhibit showcasing original artifacts and images from New Jersey's role in the war.

GROUP EXPERIENCES

18TH AND 19TH CENTURY LIVING HISTORY

East Jersey Old Town Village

At Johnson Park
1050 River Road
Piscataway, NJ 08854

Founded by Dr. Joseph Kler in 1971, the Village is a collection of historic buildings relocated in Johnson Park representing different architectural styles found throughout the Raritan Valley from the 1700s and 1800s. Explore the restored buildings attributed to the early settlers, and archaeological discoveries at the long vanished colonial river port community of Raritan Landing.

Historical interpreters bring the Village to life through historic trades and artisans – masters, journeymen, apprentices and interpreters use tools and techniques of the 18th century. View the Raritan Landing collection, along with many artifacts, including furniture, household objects, tools and antique agricultural equipment.
